It was a night of extraordinary stillness, and Mr. Utterson found himself unable to understand the strange circumstances that had brought him to the door of his old friend's laboratory once again. The selfsame feeling of dread, half-remembered from his student days, crept over him as he reached for the tarnished knocker and let it fall.